

2012 Columbia Valley Late Harvest Riesling

This Late Harvest offering from the Columbia Valley represents an interesting niche in our portfolio. Well-made dessert wines are loved by two very different types of wine consumers: neophyte wine drinkers and serious wine nerds. Both are important groups to cater to and both enjoy the wine for different reasons.

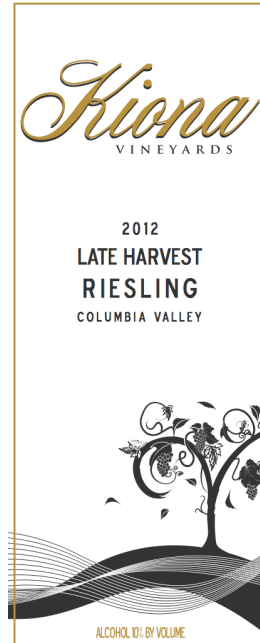

It's easy to see the appeal to those new to wine. The wine is obviously very sweet, but the sugar is balanced by a puckering acidity brought on by Washington's cool summer nights. It's important when making a dessert wine to balance sugar with acidity; otherwise the finished product can be cloying, flabby, and syrupy.

Serious wine nerds can appreciate well-made dessert wines because they understand the interesting food pair-ability they offer as well as the simple delight of "drinking dessert." The sweetness afforded by a wine in this style allows for atypical food pairings, namely spicy dishes from Thailand and Mexico.

Our 2012 Late Harvest Riesling is a three vineyard blend, and each component brings something interesting to the finished product. Riesling from Holton vineyard in the Columbia Valley comprises the backbone of the wine. This site features a gentle north-facing slope which shields our Riesling deep into the fall, a necessary trait for Late Harvest. We share a long working relationship with Crawford vineyard, whose Riesling grapes add finesse and aromatics in the blend. Lastly, a small Gewürztraminer addition from our own Ranch at the End of the Road vineyard rounds out the profile with a lovely spice/savory component.

We cold-ferment all three components in stainless steel to bring out fresh fruit characteristics and to preserve the slightest of frizzante elements to the finished product, a trademark Kiona stylistic decision that accentuates the crisp, delightful nature of this wine.

These Riesling grapes were picked well after the first frosts of the vintage. This extra time on the vine allowed for continued ripening, intensified flavor concentration, and exceptional sweetness.
