

Kiona

VINEYARDS

A 40-YEAR TRADITION. We made Red Mountain. And Red Mountain made us. Family patriarch John Williams planted the first vineyard on this dusty slope in 1975, and we've called it "home" ever since. For three generations we've worked this land. We've had our ups and downs together, but we couldn't be prouder that many consider Red Mountain the premier grape-growing region in the new world.

UNCOMMON GOODNESS. No investors. No banks. Only a family, some vineyards, and a reputation to uphold. Our mission is simple: grow grapes that capture the essence of our place, and release wines of utmost character and purpose. And deliciousness. Don't forget that.

ESTATE GROWN MATTERS. We take ownership of our product from the first berry to the finished bottle. Kiona exists because we made it, meaning our wine carries a pure-bred pedigree that spans generations and speaks volumes.

DON'T JUST ASK US. Vineyard sourcing is perhaps the single most critical decision that goes into building a quality wine, winery, brand, and reputation, and we're honored and humbled that more than 50 of the best wineries in the Pacific Northwest trust us to grow their grapes. We relish the opportunity to share the best of Red Mountain with our peers in the industry. If you have a favorite bottle of Washington wine, check the label - it might just be grown by us.

FARM AND FAMILY. We want Kiona Vineyards and Winery to be around in 100 years. We care about details. We care about the land we live and work on. We care about the dozens of employees that share our ideals and goals. We care about the consumers that have put their trust in us to deliver consistent quality. We care about the minutia of running this vineyard and winery, and we have a vested interest in doing it as well as it can possibly be done. We have to be accountable to each other, to the history we have built, and to the future generations that will continue our work.
